By the wey, the North thus facilitated by examining each American says there are grave doubts as to the idencessively from left to right, the pselontological Inhead of Churlemagne. It has been for many years kept in the top of n large gilded metal cross, and exhibited on certain days of the year in the Cathedral of Monza. It is not strictly of iron, for it is enclosed in a gold casing, about two inches wide, inerusted with variously colored precious stones. A portion of the iron is said to have been made from one of the nails used in the Crucifixion, and the public were jealously excluded from approaching too near; perhaps the Austrians had a superstitious fear that, if the people got hold of it, their tenner in Lombardy would go too. The real crown was of great antiquity, having been placed by Queen Theudelinds, the widow of Authoris, king of Lombardy, on the brow of Agiluth, duke of Turin, on the occasion of their marriage, in the year 591. In the year 774, Charlemague subdued the kingdom of Lombardy, and procisimed himself king of that province, and on this occasion, PopeAdrian I. placed this Iron crown on the conqueror's head. It also crowned Frederick IV., and Charles V., and it ought to have cruwned Napoleon I, when he because king of Lombardy, in 1805, but that it had been provincely stolen by some thieves from the native the previously stolen by some thieves from the native the previously stolen by some thieves from the native the previously stolen by some thieves from the native the previously stolen by some thieves from the native the previously stolen by some thieves from the native the previously stolen by some thieves from the native the previously stolen by some thieves from the native the previously stolen by some thieves from the native the previously stolen by some thieves from the native the province, and on this occasion, PopeAdrian I. placed this Iron crown on the conqueror's head. PIRIT MESSAGE.
CYRUS STATION, N. F., Ang. 6. To the Invectors of the Atlantic Telegraph Company:

wide-scattered readers to whisper the correspond-ent name—that went to school with us:

perfectly namerated, about the became rather mythical la his identity and locality, and of his present whereabouts or ultimate fate we are without definite information, or, in fact, any informa-tion whatever. The telegraph wire was long ago given up to the mermaids—perhaps for cricoline— hut it is to us a very perplexing mystery what can have become of Mr. Ds Sauty. We have a personal beart, to sing and flush through the endiese ancession of readers. Oh, this is fame! A sweet thought, a daircate dream, a heart-cradied fancy, a life-loved name flutters up from a poet's heart on the bright wings of a faw sweet words, and ie a song forever—a jewel. interest in his welfare, of which we have not esr-"This on the stretched foredinger of all time sparkles."
"All time" is the Reader—the reader that sets the jewel. All time le the Enader the proud ambition addresses. An Irishman is said to have writtings that may have heppered to him in his exposed position. Will some of the city editors, who have after sources of information than reference to length of time airce he was heard from, make inwilgus," that Horace hated and banned from his percent presence? That could not be, for in thy binam heart was it not that he deemed was built that monument more lasting than brass, which fame could not destroy nor time exumble?

Same could not destroy nor time exumble?

Whe mad where is the reader? When in exquisite poems and dalightful escays we address that mythical being, shall we imagine ourselves whispering from our one beloved hanguage into the Babel are of the world is the reader? That the least affect the theorem which would retain a matter which does not hange the fact that the letter itself the one of the world is the reader omniscient, so that all language in that ear are varnacular? That Mr. William De Beek, of the County Auditor's Office, who accompanied the police, caught a young manby the shoulder, saving. "I've got you, sir." De Marbais spoke up: "There is no me to blame but me. I did it." Policeman Medfrew went to Blanche and assisted her to rise. She said, "I came out of the house to die." Thus she exclaimed in agony, "Oh, my daughter! Oh, my daughter!" Mr. Mc-Grew asked her where her daughter was. She seid but was with the Mersh Troupe, and upon being removed, as she was forthwith, to the Ninth Screet Station House, she took off a splendid jet cross, tipsed with gold, kissed it, and desired it to be sent to

The bark Thomas Dallett, which sailed from Porto Cabello on the 1st last, brings latters and papers of that date, from which we learn that Gen. Falcon, heading the revolutionary party, wes e few miles below Porto Cabello with 500 man, and, having joined with the forces of Gan. Ganavara, was preparing to make an attack upon the placa, which is well barricaded and supported by 200 government troops ned the national militia. The two main streets of the city are protected by six plocas of artillery, and in case the revolutionary party should succeed, it will be after some hard fighting. This government vassels never started out to pravant bial hording nutil after he was asfe ashore. One of Filcen's vessels was taken, the other broken to pieces. Sirce landing, Falcon has had free communication with his friends in Porto Cabello. A plan for his entrance had been fixed, but the arrest of some of his accomplices prevented the treachery being carried out.
